06.	PT Scent Indonesia	produces sandalwood oil, a basic material for perfumes, in it's factory in Dili. It exports this commodity by air from Jakarta for US$ 150 per kg in 50 kg drums. This factory (the only one in ET), has invested Rp. 1,395,671,000 (the largest industrial investment in ET so far), employs 42 workers, produces 465 tons of sandalwood oil and waste worth Rp 497,088,000 in 1990. The oil is exported to France, while the waste is exported to Taiwan. The company's oil presses can consume 30 to 40 tons of sandalwood per month, but the Forestry Service can only supply it with less than 20 tons per month, through depots in every sandalwood producing district in ET, where the company buys the wood for Rp 4,000 to 8,000 per kg, depending on the quality of the wood. Three years ago, the company provided 30,000 sandalwood seedlings to the prov. govt., but the company claims that it takes 30 years before the wood can be harvested. However, according to a researcher who hails from West Timor, so far no sandalwood reforestation project has succeded. Hence, the company's sandalwood oil production has declined in the last two years, due to the depletion of the natural sandalwood stock in ET. When local demand could not be met, the company sent raw marble blocks to BIG's rep. office in Surabaya to be cut in Tulungagung (East Java), and afterwards shipped

BIG's unsuccessful sugar project in Lautem

The idea to built sugar mills in Lautem (Lospalos) by utilizing the savannahs of Lautem and Baucau for sugar plantations, came mainly from Harry Murdani, a brother of Gen. Benny Murdani. As project officer Harry Murdani hired a retired military, Soewantho, former army commander (Dandim) of Suai. Soewantho's house in Dili was used as the project's base camp. But for unclear reasons (lack of water? security problems?), the sugar project did not go through. Soewantho is now the head of the ET branch of Apindo (Asosiasi Pengusaha Indonesia). His address is Jl. Akadiruhun, Phone: (0390) 21-843.

To export the sugar, a new harbor (port) was going to be built at Com, a fishers' village in Lautem. It is unclear which BIG member was going to construct the harbor. According to one source, the "sugar project" became a point of rivalry between Murdani's and Tutut Suharto's companies in ET. According to another source, the harbor was going to be built by PT Spektra, and PT Konindo Timor was only going to be involved in the project's supervision. According to another source again, the sugar project was related to the PT Guntur Madu Tama Group, which is owned by the Sumampouw brothers. All these "infos" still need to be verified.
